Among the early English families that came to Oxford, Mass. after its abandonment by the Huguenots, was Uriah Stone, of Framingham, a descendent of Gregory, of Cambridge, and John, Daniel, and John, of Framingham.

About 1761, or 16 years later, Hezekiah, his cousin (once removed) came to Oxford with his family and settled. These two ancestors have furnished many descendents, both dead and living, which have become scattered over a wide range of territory, and few, if any, are now living in Oxford.

That the family possess certain tolerably uniform traits is obvious to any who possess a large acquaintance with the various branches. They have always been large land owners, a trait which would appear to be very old and common to, and probably antedating, the original Simon and Gregory, of New England.

Living in an age which required considerable exertion to obtain a livelihood, it was to be expected that many of our ancestors were extremely practical and hard headed, and occasionally we find those today who have little interest outside of the present, or in anything other than a limited daily routine confined to a restricted horizon.

Undoubtedly the uniformity of life habits had much to do in bringing out family characteristics in colonial times. The pursuing of similar occupations from generation to generation has a tendency to emphasize common traits of character. On the other hand, the continual adaptation of individuals to a greater variety of occupations, conditions, etc.—a feature which is more common at the present

At least one other descendent of Gregory Stone was in Oxford at one time. Rev. Isaac, of Douglas, and Shrewsbury, a son of Dea. James and Rachel, of Framingham and Shrewsbury (Isaac, Joseph, Samuel, Gregory) was there from 1817 until his death which occurred in 1837. He had a son, Luke, who left descendents. Joseph Merriam, son of Joseph, of England, married Sarah, daughter of Gregory Stone, of Cambridge, 12 July, 1653. They had 11 children, and a number of the nephews and nieces settled in Oxford, where an important branch of the family was established. A William Stone, of Waltham, settled in Oxford in 1775. He married a Mrs. Esther (Gale) Haven, of Watertown, who had a son, by first marriage. William left no issue and his step-son, David, took the name of Stone. He left many descendents. We have not been able to trace William's descent, but infer that it may be from Simon, of Watertown. We are unable to definitely locate Ambrose Stone who came from Sutton to Oxford about 1768, and who left descendents. The family tradition is to the effect that he was a cousin of Uriah: probably, however, more or less removed. For various reasons we are led to believe that he was a descendent of Gregory.

time—renders individuality more plastic, less conservative and provincialism less marked, hence disguising and modifying traits that otherwise might have become, under other circumstances, more pronounced.

In matters of religion the family early took a prominent and rational interest in the approved and prescribed forms of Calvinistic Congregationalism.

The family characteristic however, as a whole, is practical and logical, rather than sentimental and emotional, and it is not surprising, especially in New England where religious and philosophic thought is always active, that the family has been to a large extent in sympathy, if not always prominent in the so called liberal religious movements. Respectable living, education and good literature, by the fireside, have had considerable to do with the evolution of religious thought in New England families, and the motives which lead to the acceptance of new ideas were by no means antagonistic to the natural processes of development. Many of the former staunch advocates of Calvinism were subsequently brought into relationship and sympathy with religious individualism and idealism, as manifested in Unitarianism and to a certain extent with Transcendentalism.

The elder Uriah and many of his descendents are buried in the Oxford Gore cemetery, which is only about one-half mile from the Rochdale Station on the Boston & Albany railroad. In some lines of Stone descent, there are six generations buried in this cemetery which is located in a quiet, secluded spot. The Gore for many years was more or less an independent community, belonging to no township, though claimed by different ones, but most closely affiliated with Oxford. In most cases the records were entered in Oxford, in some instances in Leicester, and occasionally in Worcester, while in other cases it would appear they were not recorded at all.

The descendents of Hezekiah became much more scattered at an earlier period, hence rendering the process of securing data more difficult. This branch appears to have been very prolific, as is shown by the numerous large families, and many of them became pioneer settlers. They were apparently a strong, hardy, patriotic offshoot, not shrinking from the duties of military life, as is evident from the numerous officers and soldiers. The descendents of Hezekiah, through John of Worthington, however, are tolerably well represented. They settled to a large extent in the West, and have become eminently successful in various lines.

It is practically impossible to obtain absolutely correct records in every case, inasmuch as town vital records are not always reliable and family bibles differ, although they constitute the most authentic source of information, with perhaps the exception of records pertaining to wills and deeds.

Family traditions, moreover, cannot always be relied upon. In this connection it may be of interest to note that the most common tradition existing in the family, pertaining to the original ancestors in New England, is that there were three brothers who emigrated from England. These being Dea. Simon, Dea. Gregory and Rev. Samuel. Another tradition signified that they were Welsh, and it is stated elsewhere that Rev. Timothy Stone, a minister in the West of England, was the father of Simon, Gregory and Samuel. (Hist. of Marlborough, N. H., Page 637.) We know now, however, that these and many other similar traditions are unreliable. We have obtained the following information from various sources, and where discrepancies in dates occur we have noted them in many instances.

Our object has been to locate lines of descent which we hope will prove of some value and act as a stimulus for further research, inasmuch as time passes by authentic records pertaining to the older families are more difficult to obtain. If any inaccuracies in dates, etc. be observed we would however be pleased to learn of the same.

We have not attempted to add extensive notes in regard to the life history of individuals, and no significance should be attached to those cases which show a paucity of narrative or descriptive material or are entirely lacking in such.

Places of residences, births, deaths, etc. are in Massachusetts when not otherwise designated.

Gregory came to New England about 1635. He lived for about two years in Watertown where he held grants of land, and finally settled in Cambridge near the present location of the Botanical Gardens. On May 25, 1636, he and his brother, Simon, appeared together and took the freeman's oath. In 1638 he was made deacon of the First church of Cambridge, of which he was one of the founders. He was deacon for 34 years and the last survivor of its original members. He was a leading man in the town and colony; a representative in the general assembly; one of the governors deputies and a magistrate in the town of Cambridge. His large land holdings extended to Lexington, and his orchard was celebrated for yielding large quantities of excellent fruit.

He is buried in the old cemetery near the first Cambridge church, where a suitable memorial recently erected by the Stone association marks his grave. A copy of his will has been published in the New England Historical Geneological Register.

5. URIAH STONE, (John,⁴ Daniel,³ John,² *Gregory*¹), b. Framingham, 13 or 16 May, 1713; d. Oxford, 24 Oct., 1797; m. Oxford, 22 Nov., 1739, Mary Blount (Blunt), b. 1720—21, d. Oxford, 1 Sept., 1792.

Uriah moved to Oxford in 1745 and settled in that portion formerly designated, County Gore. This track of land originally consisted of 10,000 acres and adjoined Charlton, Leicester and Sturbridge. Part of this track was subsequently embodied in the towns of Charlton, Sturbridge and Auburn while the remaining portion was made a part of Oxford in 1838. In 1721 the Gore land was sold to persons residing near Boston, among other purchasers being Anne [Tileston] Stone, of Framingham, mother of Uriah, and wife of John⁴. Uriah's mother purchased 300 acres, part of which, now designated as the Liberty Lamb place was purchased by Uriah from his brother James in 1745, and eventually the original 300 acres again came into possession of the family. He was engaged in manufacturing potash, running two large establishments and transacted considerable business. From 1752 to 1783 he kept a public house, and was licensed to sell tea, coffee, etc. About 1754 he constructed a dam and saw mill which was later known as Stone's mill; the remains of the dam being discernable at the present day. In 1756 and 1757 he was clerk of a company that saw service in the French and Indian war, and, with other public spirited citizens, he contributed money to carry on the Revolutionary war. In 1769 he and his son-in-law, William Cambell, bought the Elliott mills which they sold to John Stone, Uriah's son, in 1771. He was one of the largest tax-payers in Oxford and a prominent stockholder in the land bank scheme which was popular in many localities at that time, but subsequently considered by many an injudicious undertaking.

Little is known about John and his descendents, the following data being obtained from the Chesterfield cemetery, church and town records. He and two children, Laura and Betsy, are buried in the Chesterfield cemetery. Betsy's birth however, is not given in the town records, neither is his wife buried beside him. An Elizabeth Stone, of Chesterfield, probably his widow, married Samuel Warner, of Hadley, 29 Sept., 1805. He owned the Eliott mills in Oxford from 1771 to 1778. It is stated that he "bought largely of soldiers' claims and became the owner of two townships. There being some doubt as to the validity of titles, he compromised with the government and accepted 1500 acres on the Genesee River, N. Y. at or near the site of Rochester. He had a son Samuel in high standing, City Librarian, at Chicago, Ill."—Hist. Oxford, p. 703.

His son Samuel died about twenty years ago and is buried in Chicago. He had two unmarried daughters.

"He was an energetic, successful, business man, one of the leading men of the region, built the large mansion overlooking Rochdale ; was largely instrumental in procuring the building of the Worcester and New Haven turnpike which passed through Rochdale, and which in those days of scarcity of money was a great undertaking. He was commissary in the U. S. Army in 1775 and in the Saratoga campaign in 1777, and a warm friend of General Learned."—Hist. of Oxford, p. 703-4.

In 1787 he purchased his father's estate and built, probably on the same site where his father lived, a large house which is still in existence and in a good state of preservation. After his death the homestead was for a time occupied by his son, Samuel, and later by his son-in-law, Liberty Lamb, and nephews, Elbridge and John Lamb. His son John, who died at the age of 25 years, was a promising young man, and was in the card business in Leicester.

His unmarried daughter, Mary Elizabeth Blount Stone, was a person of "remarkable endowments," though at times being affected with mental aberration. She possessed an acute intellect, and was particularly well versed in family history and traditions.

Luther succeeded his father Uriah on the homestead and built, soon after his marriage in 1800, a large house now in existence on the site of the one owned by his father which was burned. In company with his Uncle Samuel he built a saw and grist mill in 1807 on the old dam utilized by his Grandfather Uriah. They operated this together until Samuel's death in 1820, after which Luther continued the business until October, 1848, when the mill was burned. He then built on a new location some distance below on the stream, now the location of the mill of E. I. Comins & Co., and continued in business until his decease. He was a successful man of his day and left an estate valued at $20,000. His son Lewis lived on the old homestead until 1884, when it was sold and Lewis removed to Sterling.

The following letters written by Mary Elizabeth Blount Stone, and now in the possession of Mrs. Moses Bemis pertain to Luther's family.

"Abigail Smith of Charlton was married to Mr. Bemis of Spencer, a descendent of the first settler of said name of Bemis in Spencer. Abigail S. Bemis died in one year after her marriage; left a daughter who bore her name, Abigail Bemis, of Spencer. Mr. Bemis married again; second wife had a daughter, Jemima."

"Jemima Bemis died unmarried in Spencer, hence Abigail claimed the patrimony on both father's and mother's side, which became like three thousand dollars ($3,000), when the last grandmother died. She received the woman's compliment of one hundred pounds of lawful money, which enabled her to purchase a chaise, square toppt, like unto Col. Samuel Denny's and Mr. Jonas Livermore's of Leicester. Miss A. Bemis, after the death of her father, became the adopted niece of her uncle, Capt. Jesse Smith, of Charlton, East, whose wife was Sally Bemis, a kinswoman of said Abigail's father."

Miss Mary E. B. Stone was six years old when Luther and Abigail were married, and this is her account of the wedding, which she witnessed, written January, 1860, 60 years afterwards.

"Mr. Luther Stone, of County Gore, was married to Miss A. Bemis on Wednesday in May, one thousand eight hundred (1800), by Sylvanus Learned of North Oxford. Col. Sylvanus Learned was son of General Learned of same place. The groom and bridesmaid were Hezekiah and Sally Stone of the same family. They rode horseback, the men wore small Nankeen short pants, blue coats and white vests. Miss Abigail was dressed in white sprigged muslin; the bridesmaid in plain, shear muslin. Cousin Candace, Uriah and Mary Elizabeth B. looked on."

Hezekiah was a tavern keeper and merchant at South Leicester, being located on the Stafford Turnpike. The large colonial tavern, which he built about 1815, is still maintained as a public house. Previous to his marriage he lived many years with his Uncle Samuel. He contributed liberally and gave the land for the establishment of the Episcopal church in Rochdale, with the restriction that it never be alienated from the sacred purpose for which it was originally designed. This society was the first of this denomination to be established in Worcester County, the church being built in 1824.

About 1820, he leased the tavern property, and built and occupied the homestead later known as the Samuel Firth place. About 1831 he re-entered the tavern, remaining there until 1833, when he sold the same and returned to the Firth homestead, where he lived until his death.

Dr. William lived at Enfield, where he had a wide and extensive practice and was greatly beloved. The births of his children, except the two younger, are on the Auburn records. The latter were born at Enfield. Three infants not given below are also buried beside him. The marriage of one William and Sarah Clarke is given in the Auburn records, which undoubtedly is our William, but the accuracy of the date is questionable. His son, Dr. Rufus, practised medicine at Greenwich, and Dr. William, Jr., at Harvard. An old oil portrait representing a kindly and dignified old gentleman is now in the possession of his nephew, Henry Stone, of Enfield.

John was born either at Oxford or Framingham. Temple claims Framingham as his birthplace while Daniels states that he was probably born at Oxford (now Auburn). His father, Jesse, settled in Oxford, on Prospect Hill (now Auburn), about 1763, or the year of John's birth. John's children are all in Auburn records, and he probably moved to Worthington after 1802, where he lived and died. He was a Revolutionary soldier, and in May, 1779, he enlisted for six weeks under Col. Dutcher; for two months, under Col. Jackson in Sept., 1779; and in July, 1780, he enlisted for three months under Col. Rand.

About 1828 he and his elder brother, Jesse, established at Columbus, Ohio, a successful mercantile business, where they built a block of stores and became capitalists. They subsequently located in New York city and their nephews, Alfred P., Dwight, John, Jesse R. and others succeeded them in the mercantile business at Columbus, Ohio, and eventually all were established in this business in separate firms.

Sumner and his elder brother, Jesse, established a large cotton commission business in New York which has been successfully carried on for over fifty years. Sumner, Jr., and Edwin succeeded them in the cotton commission business. They were eminently successful business men, possessing broad ideas and a generous and helpful disposition which was manifested in a practical manner on many occasions. One of the nephews characterized them as follows: "They were two noble Christian gentlemen. The first bond of union between us was blood relationship, but in later years there was the strongest bond of pure friendship. Their nephews will always hold their memory in immortal green."
